CUTTING AND PACKING OPTIONS

One of the many advantages of purchasing lock-er beef is that the customer can make decisions about how to have the meat cut and packed. This is an excellent opportunity to get a package tailored to your family's needs, but there are a few things to keep in mind about your choices as you are filling out a cut form or talking to Rocky Hill Farm Beef about processing your meat:

CARCASS WEIGHT IS NOT TAKE-HOME WEIGHT

When an animal is cut, there is some loss you have to accept. Rocky Hill Farm Beef will cut your carcass into table-ready cuts and discard any inedible gristle, fat, and bones. Yield weight will be impacted based on your decisions regarding cuts. Bone-in choices will result in a higher yield weight, while boneless choices will result in fewer pounds taken home. Choosing to take your organ meats and bones can increase your take-home pounds.

SOME CUTS AFFECT OTHERS

Several cuts are mutually exclusive. One of the most common questions our T&E customers ask is this: "Why can't I get both T-bone and Porterhouse steaks, as well as filet and NY Strip steaks?" As this picture illustrates, all of these cuts come from the same muscles; it's just a different way to cut them. When you submit your cutting instructions, make sure to ask Rocky Hill Farm Beef to explain how one cutting decision can affect another, so you'll be sure to get the cuts you want.

SIZE OF CUTS EFFECTS NUMBER OF CUTS

Requesting heavier roasts or thicker steaks will reduce the number of pieces you get back and vice-versa.
